Instructions for Registering an Animal

Every animal to be registered must have a name. Names must be limited to 30 letters and spaces, including herd name. The animal's name should begin with the breeder's prefix or name. If you are not the breeder of the animal, you will not be able to use your herd prefix in naming the animal. The animal's name must be unique within the registration data base.

The breeder of an animal is the owner of the dam at time of conception. If the breeder is not the owner of the buck, the buck information must be filled out and signed by the owner of the buck on the application for registration.

Sire owners; please indicate if the breeding was done naturally or if the doe was artificially inseminated.

Unworthy or unsound animals or those not having the standard breed characteristics should not be presented for registry. Such animals will not be registered in the herd books of the MSFGA, when the facts are known. False and unworthy registrations will be cancelled without a refund.

Under color description, give specific colors and markings. Disbudded or otherwise removing the horns does not make the animal horn-less.

All animals presented for registration must have tattoo numbers assigned to it prior to registration. The right ear should have the farm letter tattoo and the left ear should have the letter representing the year the kid was born followed by a number. If using microchips or scrapie tags for identification, then a microchip number or scrapie tag should be assigned to the animal and implanted before registration.
